

A photograph of a man and a woman in a kitchen. The man, on the left, has short reddish hair and is wearing a black polo shirt. He is looking towards the woman and has a slight smile. The woman, on the right, has long dark hair and is wearing a dark blue shirt with a white star pattern. She is laughing heartily with her eyes closed. They are standing in front of a wooden countertop. On the counter, there is a white food processor, a yellow cutting board, a knife, and some vegetables including a whole onion and a carrot. In the background, there are white kitchen cabinets.

Lighting

Why is lighting important?

Everyone needs good levels of light and as we get older these needs increase. As your eyes age, less light reaches the retina at the back of your eyes, which transmits information to your brain. Most people aged 60 need three times more light than when they were 20. Enhanced lighting can be extremely beneficial to people experiencing sight loss, but some eye conditions can result in glare problems even in normal light levels, which can be uncomfortable or even intolerable.

Lighting hints and tips

- Increase contrast by using specific lighting in the right area: a task light in the kitchen can brighten up a work surface and quick start-up energy-saving lights are a great idea in the hall, stairs and landing.
- Avoid shadows in key areas by ensuring brightness levels are similar as you move through the house.
- Use light-coloured lampshades, keep windows clean and use bright surfaces to reflect as much natural light as possible.
- Use battery-powered LED (light-emitting diode) lights in areas where trailing wires may prove hazardous.
- Use a combination of wall, table and floor lights to give an even spread of light rather than relying on one central light.
- Ensure you are never closer than 30cm (1ft) to any bulb and make sure task lighting is below your eye level; keep it close to the task to avoid shadows.
- The amount of illumination on an object increases fourfold if the distance between the lamp and the object is halved. Remember to keep some background lighting on as well as it will help prevent eye strain.

Visit rnib.org.uk/lighting to download our lighting factsheet, which explains specifications such as Kelvins, lux and lumens, to help you choose the right lighting products.

Given their flexibility, it's no surprise that some of our bestselling lights are portable ones.

This sleek, easy-to-use radio has tactile buttons and voice prompts to help you use all the features. It has an extra-large display with high-contrast characters, a message feature that can be used for reminders and is compatible with USB sticks from RNIB's Talking Book service.

All the controls and buttons are tactile and easy-to-use; the buttons also give audible confirmation when pressed. The buttons for initial set-up and recording memos (for example, reminders to take medicines or for appointments) are concealed beneath a flap when not in use.

The main controls are black and easy to see against the radio's white upper casing. The large volume and tuning controls are clearly marked with bold, black text, and can be identified by touch (one is concave, the other convex).

White text on the black display uses upper and lower-case letters to make reading easier, while voice prompts can talk you through features such as tuning or recording a 10-second voice memo.

The radio also has a temperature display with Low Room Temperature Alert option, dual alarm with Snooze function, a sleep timer and the option to pre-set three FM and three DAB stations as favourites.

Eyeshields

Whether indoors or outside, eyeshields can help relieve eye strain, reduce glare and enhance contrast.

Why wear eyeshields?

Eyeshields help to protect your eyes and can help increase contrast and definition. They're light and easy to wear and some styles can be worn over your existing prescription glasses. They can be worn inside and outdoors, whether you're shopping, working at a computer, under fluorescent lighting, or outdoors in the sunshine or on an overcast day.

Eyeshields are designed to exclude harmful ultraviolet (UV) and blue light, which can damage the retina. Your eye specialist can advise you which filter colour would best suit your eye condition.

Why MediView eyeshields?

The MediView range incorporates five HiView™ filters, each designed to help make a significant difference to your everyday life. Each filter has different properties, purposefully created to minimise glare, enhance contrast, and improve adaptation when moving from sun to shade, while also helping to enhance protection to the internal structure of the eye.

There is also a choice of well-designed, comfortable and protective frames, intended to enhance the benefits of the MediView HiView™ range. The percentage shows the amount of light absorbed by the filter.

The MediView HiView™ filter range

HiView™ Lite is a yellow filter that provides 100 per cent blue light absorption for reduced glare, UV protection and a high contrast filter for improved definition. For indoor use and low intensity sun (26 per cent absorption).

HiView™ Midi is an orange filter that provides 100 per cent blue light absorption for reduced glare, UV protection and a high contrast filter designed for improved definition. For indoor use and low intensity sun (53 per cent absorption).

HiView™ Extra is an amber filter that provides 100 per cent blue light absorption for reduced glare, UV protection and a high contrast filter designed for improved definition. For general outdoor use and sunlight (81 per cent absorption).

HiView™ Plus is a green filter that provides blue and red light absorption for reduced glare and UV protection. For those who prefer a lower degree of contrast compared to Midi or Extra, Plus is for general outdoor use and sunlight (81 per cent absorption).

HiView™ Neutral is a grey filter that provides UV protection, Neutral is for those who prefer not to have contrast as provided by the other filters. Designed for general outdoor use and sunlight (68 per cent absorption).
